

1. While looking for women's linen shorts, it led me to lists of related search results full with women's garment websites. However, my original intention for this search was to look up a list of products available instead of websites. To do so, I had to click on the shopping tab again. It would have been more convenient if it had shown some related products above the list of related websites.

2. When I searched for women's shorts on shopping tab, on the bottom, it showed a bar with several word tags. However, its word tags were not helpful at all! It had shown many unrelated word tags such as "Big and Tall Men's Clothing, Haggard Pants" which I find hard relation to women's shorts.

3. When a list of products for women’s linen shorts are shown, I wanted to see them from lowest price to highest price sorting option. On the left, there was a side bar for filtering price, but no organization feature was provided. Also, when a specific product was selected for more detailed information, there was a sign showing price dropped 35% below in 90 day average. This is a really helpful information, but it did not provide original retail price. Does a customer need to calculate what the original price was with the drop percentage given? I am sure many customers enjoy that feeling of shopping at a bargain price by comparing the original price to the sale price.
